Power Farming Training Given By

Present indications point to large enrollment of men and boys in power farming training courses which the state is giving at the University Farm, Lincoln. These courses are four weeks long, and may begin any Monday morning. They consist of tractors, trucks, automobiles, and the farm shop. Registration can only be made in one course at a time, as a full day's work is required in each course, two hours being given to lectures and six hours to laboratory and practice work. The farm shop course consistes of blacksmithing and carpentering. On acto take these courses, prospective students should notify the Principal, School of Agriculture, University Farm, Lincoln, a week before they expect to register.

Nebraska Boys Win as Judges The Nebraska stock judging team carried off top honors at the Interstate Fair at Sioux City. The team was composed of Walter Briggs, Norval Clark and Peter Pratt, three Seward county pig club boys who excelled in judging at the State Fair. The three boys exhibited pigs at the State Fair and carried off a number of ribbons. Walter Priggs toking a of ribbons, Walter Briggs taking a total of twenty-one. The Nebraska girls canning team won first place at the Sioux City Fair last year.

Potato Dry Rot Can Be Controlled Potato dry rot may not be entirely eliminated in western Nebraska but it can be controlled to a considerable extent. Careful investigations indicate that the dry rot organism grows only at low temperatures and that it must come in contact with the raw flesh of the potato before it can do any damage. Hence it is very important to handle potatoes carefully so as not to bruise or cut the potato. A potato with an unbroken skin will be practically certain to remain solid if it is handled reasonably. Crates or sacks used as containers for handling the potatoes from the field to the cellar or car are more desirable than the open wagon box of scoop. The potato cellars should be disinfeeted with a strong formalin solution after they have been cleaned thoroughly. The storage tempera-ture should be maintained as near to 32 degrees as possible. Potatoes, it must be remembered, are almost as tender as apples and should be handled accordingly. Further details on storage methods of handling potatoes are contained in Horticulture Circulars 1 and 3, Nebraska Agricul-tural College, Lincoln.

Much Interest in Septic Tanks
A model of a farm septic tank for sewage disposal exhibited at the State Fair by the Extension Service, College of Agriculture, attracted the attention of farmers who are planning modern homes. This system of sewage disposal has been found the most successful, and at the same time perhaps the least expensive in installation and upkeep. Further information and blueprint plans will be supplied by the Extension Service.

Land Speculation Brings Warning The continued inflation of land values by speculators has caused the United States Department of Ag.i-culture to send out a warning. Serious consequences are liable to result from the boom, the department says, especially when the price of farm products tends to go back to normal. Experts estimate that an advance of 25 per cent was justifiable for Iowa land, but speculators have pushed the price far above this in many instances.

Plenty of Seed Corn in State

It is anticipated that farmers will have no trouble obtaining good secd from this year's corn crop. Most of the corn matured early, especially if it was planted at the normal time. At the University Farm the corn was well matured September 10 and it appears to be well out of the way of frost. In those portions of the state where the yield will be small on account of unfavorable weather conditions it is regarded as good practice to save seed from the local crop rather than risk introducing some new variety, the adaptation of which is not fully known.

Dry Sllage Needs Water

Where corn is somewhat dried up, as much of it is this year, the Ne-braska Agricultural Experiment Station has found that the addition of a liberal amount of water aids materially in preserving silage. There is little danger of getting too much water into the silo. The principal difficulty, especially where there is no water pressure, is how to get the water in. By running a hose into water pressure, is now to get the water in. By running a hose into the blower a considerable amount can be put in. Water aids in packing the silage and otherwise helps to preserve it.
